logsheads, 16,370 boxes, and 606 packages. THE RICHMOND WHEAT MARKET .- In our last thew we had the satisfaction of presentag to our readers a comparative tabular state best of the receipts of wheat at Richmond. futing the months of July and August this year and last. This statement showed that the retripts so far, this season, were largely in advance the receipts for the corresponding period of lat reason; and we stated, moreover, that, as compared with every antecedent year, the retipls of July and August, this year, were unprecedentedly large. Now all this was true though; but, inasmuch as the well-founded imnesion has gone abroad that the wheat crop of liging has proved wofully deficient this year, one of our distant readers may be puzzled to indenstand why it is, that, with a yield twenty he cent less than last year's, the receipts at the leading market in the State should be so extessively large. It is proper that the seeming bomaly should be explained, and, for the enstenment of all concerned, it becomes us to thempt the explanation. In the first place, we base bad a very dry Summer, and in many of sale by the counties the drought has been protracted to the present time. Consequently field operations have been rendered almost wholly impracticable by the aridity of the soil, and tarmers, from their inability to do anything else, have employed their forces in threshing wheat and sending it to market. The liberal prices offered by the millers of this city, have also presented an inducement to the farmer- to sell their wheat; and no doubt many of them who contemplated hoarding for better rates, have concluded, after surveying the prospects, that it was wiser to sell at nee, under existing circumstances, than trust to the uncertain future. The fine prices which have ruled here since the opening of the market have served to attract hither a large quantity of wheat, which legi'imately, or rather, customarily, would have sought other and more accessible markets, while a great deal of wheat which did find its way to some of these markets-Pe tersburg, for instance-was re-shipped hither by its purchasers, and sold at an advance on prime cost. In addition to all these facts, it is to be remembered that since last year, connection by railroad with Tennessee has been completed and large quantities of wheat have been forwarded Eastward from that prolific region of country. We had supposed that about 75,000 bushels had been sent to Richmond since the middle of July, but it is the opinion of others, who ought to know, that not more than hall of this quantity has been received here. "What has become of the rest!" is a question which we will attempt to solve in a few days, by making suitable inquiries. If the reasons which we have offered, in explanation of the heavy increase in the wheat trade of Richmond, so far this season, be valid, it follows that the receipts of Virginia wheat for the remainder of the season, will be very light, taking for granted that the aggregate yield was as d ficient as represented .- Richmond Whig.
